

Women from ancient folktales emerge as role models for women and girls today in a new book: Land of Roses and Nightingales, Seven Adventures of a Persian Girl.

It was while author Nooshie Motaref scoured bookshops and libraries of her native Tehran, Iran, for old folktales that she came across these seven stories with women protagonists.

“These stories inspired me to share them,” says Nooshie. “The stories convinced me that anything is possible if I rely on myself using my mind and my heart as my guides.”

The seven adventures make the book, along with a literary analysis and insightful conclusion. Readers young and mature will find these tales inspiring, stirring and motivating at home by the fire, at the beach or in the classroom.
